CONTINUE MODUS VIVENDI.*Secretary Root Will Ask Its Continuance Another Season.*No Time To Prepare New Treaty Before Hague Tribunal.

The state department has decided that it will not be feasible to negotiate a treaty this session for the consideration by The Hague tribunal of the Newfoundland fisheries disputes. The case, has yet to be made up and the lawyers have not yet been put to work on it.

The treaty has to be carefully drawn as the issue of the arbitration agreed upon at London months ago may depend largely upon the wording of the treaty and the definition of what is to be submitted to arbitration.

As there is not sufficient time in which to place a treaty before the senate at this session, Secretary Root will ask that the present modus vivendi affecting fishing in Newfoundland waters to continued another season.

HAVE SEEN NO FISH AT ALL.*Fog and Heavy Weather Have Hampered Fleet.*SOME AT STATEN ISLAND TODAY*Fleet Will Cruise South When Good Weather Comes.

A special to the Times from its New York correspondent this afternoon gives the first news from the southern mackerel fleet since April 9, when the last fares were landed at Fulton Market.

Yesterday schs. Elizabeth Silsbee, Metamora, Squanto, Madonna, Pinta, Hattie M. Graham, Esperanto, Parthia and one other of the seining fleet arrived off Staten island and harbored there and are there today. Some of them will take on water and supplies. Sch. Grayling came along with these crafts, but kept off to the eastward yesterday afternoon, instead of coming in.

The captains report having been all over the ground all the way up from Hatteras and have not seen a fish. Since the dark nights came on, nothing but heavy weather has prevailed and about all the time the fog has been thick enough to cut with a knife.

Birds in abundance have been seen, showing that there must be some fish about, but even had they been seen, the fog and heavy weather would have prevented their capture.

One of the captains came up to Fulton Market this forenoon. He thinks that there are fish all right, if they can only get weather to work on them. He said it was now the intention of the vessels, as soon as the weather was favorable, to work south again, hoping to meet the body of fish coming this way. He reported that the balance of the fleet not in at Staten Island, were cruising outside Barnegat, and waiting for news from some of the vessels that had come in.

Two barrels of fresh bloater mackerel arrived at Fulton Market, New York, this morning from the traps at Holly Beach. The fish brought 60 cents apiece.
